

Ex-Cabo Wabo employee caught up in Roethlisberger case

Associated Press

RENO – A former Harrah's employee at Lake Tahoe claims he was fired in July 2008 because Ben Roethlisberger complained to the hotel-casino's regional boss that the worker had demanded to see identification for a young-looking woman at the NFL quarterback's table at a Harrah's restaurant where they were drinking.

Alvaro Brito, former assistant manager at the Cabo Wabo Cantina who had worked for the company 12 years, leveled the allegations in a lawsuit filed against Harrah's and its Lake Tahoe president John Koster.
