

Krolicki's entrance to NV senate race possible

By Jon Ralston, Las Vegas Review-Journal

Two Nevada institutions were pronounced dead last week â€” Harry Reid and Yucca Mountain.

These two have died more deaths than Shakespeareâ€™s coward, but both remain alive. But for how long?

I come not to write about the dump today â€” Iâ€™ll save my take on that new panel overseeing alternatives for another column â€” but to muse about whether Reid really is buried â€” or, as his friend Dina Titus put it recently, â€œdone.â€

The question must be asked (again) because of the blizzard of developments in the contest, both on Reidâ€™s side and for his potential foes. Before delving into this, though, letâ€™s look at the calendar â€” 275 days until the election. Much can happen. Reid may make another inflammatory remark (odds: overwhelming in favor) and the Republicans may slice and dice each other until a hemorrhaging, bankrupt nominee is chosen (odds: equally overwhelming).
