

3-day workshop in Leopold's land ethics

The Northern Sierra Training at Sagehen Creek Field Station is June 1-3.

The Land Ethic Leadership Program embraces the theories conservationist Aldo Leopold embraced.

Participants will be taught how to help their community think about complex and changing environmental issues and have deeper discussion about their collective values and vision. Each Land Ethic Leaders workshop engages participants from across the country in leading reflective discussions designed to help people think about the relationship between human communities and the land. Paired with nature observation and land restoration work, these discussions offer a new way to engage and build the thinking community. The workshop focuses on giving participants the skills, tools, and confidence to help others explore their individual and collective connections to the land.

The workshop fee is $350, including all meals, lodging, program materials, and a public screening license and kit for Green Fire ($150 value).

For more information, click on the flyer.