

Food and wine festival is more than eating and drinking

By Kathryn Reed

TRUCKEE – It's not often the secret ingredient is wiggling around on the counter. But that is what two chefs had to overcome during the annual Blazing Pans competition.

2011 champion Chef Sean Conry of Longboards Bar & Grill at Plumas Pines took on Chef Elsa Corrigan of Mamasake Sushi from the Village at Squaw Valley.

Crawfish from Lake Tahoe was the secret ingredient the two chefs had to incorporate into a handful of dishes at the 27th annual Lake Tahoe Autumn Food & Wine Festival earlier this month.

The fun thing about the entire multi-day event that is mostly at the Village at Northstar is that it's more than eating and drinking. Non-food vendors are interspersed with those with food. Cooking related demonstrations are going on at various locations. Some things are free, while others have a fee associated with them.

Based on the Iron Chef competition on the Food Network, the Blazing Pans contest tests the chefs' ability to create dishes using the secret ingredient in a certain amount of time. More time was incorporated to accommodate the need to peel the crawfish. Each chef had the assistance of one sous chef.

Crawfish is not something either chef has in his or her kitchen, so each was at an equal disadvantage.

"I changed my original plan 10 times," Corrigan said. "For training for something like this you have to be fluid because time is of the essence."

Salads, bisques, spring rolls, chicken stuffed with crawfish – those were just some of the dishes the chefs created.

In the end, it was Corrigan who was crowned the winner of this year's Blazing Pans competition.
