

Report card: Nev. housing market earns a C

By Michelle Bliss, NPR

Nevada's housing market earned a C grade from the state department of business and industry for its performance in the final quarter of last year.

The grade is part of the Nevada Housing Stability Index report, which looks at a dozen different factors affecting the market like foreclosure volumes and underwater loan percentages.

Research analysts say a C represents average quality and is an improvement from the D+ Nevada earned at the end of 2012.
