

Sleep impacts worker reliability

By Tara Parker-Pope, New York Times

The most reliable workers are those who get seven to eight hours of sleep each night, a new study shows.

Researchers from Finland analyzed the sleep habits and missed work days among 3,760 men and women over about seven years. The workers ranged in age from 30 to 64 at the start of the study.

Read the whole story