

Group launched to help Nevada thrive in development of autonomous cars

Nevada wants to be a leader in driverless cars.
Photo/Steve Jurvetson

By Daniel Rothberg, Las Vegas Sun

An economic development organization Tuesday approved the formation of the Center for Advanced Mobility, part of a state initiative to place Nevada on the cutting edge of automobile technology at a time when the industry is quickly pushing to develop autonomous vehicles.

The center will fall under the Nevada Institute for Autonomous Systems, a nonprofit group that currently coordinates with the Governor's Office of Economic Development to oversee the state's designation as a federal drone test site and help develop the state's unmanned aerial industry.

Read the whole story