

El Dorado, Placer charter schools named in probe

By Shirin Rajaei, CBS-13

More than two 200 California charter schools are accused of violating state and federal laws.

A recent report by the American Civil Liberties Union of Southern California says those charter schools are discriminating when admitting students. They say just like public schools, there needs to be equal access for all students enrolling.

About 20 schools from Sacramento to El Dorado and Placer counties have been named.
