

International travelers rethinking visits to U.S.

By Rebekah Sager, Fox News

President Trump's proposed travel ban of citizens from seven majority-Muslim countries is weighing heavily on the tourism industry. Whether it's individuals who want to see the U.S. or companies planning travel for corporate events, many in the industry are expecting fewer people to visit America in the foreseeable future.

Ally Bolour, a Los Angeles-based attorney who immigrated to the U.S. from Iran as a child in the 1970s, said he has friends overseas who now say they won't come for a visit.

He added that he is advising his clients not to travel to the U.S. unless they absolutely must.
