

Calif. emergency drought restrictions expire Sunday

By Mike Luery, KCRA-TV

California is looking to crack down on water wasters and make saving water a way of life – no matter how much it rains.

California's restrictions on water use in September were effective, As a result, the state saw a 15 percent drop in water use.

But those emergency regulations expire on Sunday – and that means no state enforcement until new rules can be put in place.

Read the whole story