

Nevadans with misdemeanor pot convictions want records expunged

By Colton Lochhead, Las Vegas Review-Journal

Nevadans with past misdemeanor pot convictions can have their records sealed away, but the Clark County district attorney isn't ready to wave a magic wand to make it happen.

"I'm not going to take an active role in seeking the vacation or seeking the dismissals," Clark County District Attorney Steve Wolfson said in a recent interview.

That's a different approach than several other jurisdictions have been taking.

Read the whole story