

A different ski experience after Tahoe resorts close

By Benjamin Spillman, Reno Gazette-Journal

There are two ways to think about ski resorts closing when there's still plenty of snow on the ground.

One way is to consider it a problem or unfortunate turn of events.

People who choose this route will shrug, hang up their skis in the garage and maybe even leave a frowny face emoticon on the resort's social media page.

The other way to think about it is to consider it an opportunity.

People who choose to do this can be rewarded with some of the best skiing of the year.
